

WOOD QUIRKING WEEKLY

THIS WEEKS PROJECTS

Mahogany Wardrobe

The mahogany wardrobe continued to keep Dan busy this week! With such a large piece, restoration takes time, but steady progress is being made as each section is carefully worked through. There's still plenty left to do, but it's already starting to come together, and we're looking forward to sharing more updates.

FAMILY TRADITIONS

This quirky little wooden trinket is a prank box that hides a surprise for anyone who might open it to investigate! Years ago, Nick found a similar one that belonged to his granddad, who was also a carpenter! This inspired him to make his own version!

Of course... Dan has already started planning how he's going to make his version even better! A bit of friendly rivalry is all part of the fun in the workshop.

PARTY DRESS PROGRESS

Progress on Zoe making our daughters first birthday dress is slow but steady. The bodice is mostly complete - now just to tackle the skirt. At least she won't remember it if it doesn't turn out as hoped!

FIRST BOWL BACK

The first wood bowl turning video may not have gone exactly to plan, but we're still really pleased with the finished result. Not bad at all, especially considering it's the first one Dan has turned in quite a while!

VISITING FAMILY IN SWANSEA

We had a great weekend away in Swansea catching up with family, who are always brilliant hosts. There was plenty of good food, lots of laughs, and we even got to watch Wales pull off a rare win in the rugby against Fiji!

The rest of the weekend was spent playing board games, having a wander around a local market, and enjoying a lovely walk along Mumbles. It was just what we needed—a chance to slow down, spend time together, and enjoy a change of scenery.
